Could you be an
Ambassador for Pharmacology?

AMBASSADORS
SCHEME

Bringing the global pharmacology community together

Our Ambassadors have a passion for sharing their science, promoting pharmacology and representing the Society - and they are really important to us!

The role

Ambassadors:

- ◆ Connect the whole pharmacology community with the Society
- ◆ Bring pharmacology to life for people who might not know about it, by engaging the public with pharmacology

Each Ambassador might carry out their role in a different way, with different activities. Activities are flexible, and recognise the unique context, local opportunities, personal experience and interests of the Ambassador who is running them. For activities that engage the public, the audience can range from patients, community and school groups, to key stakeholders like policy makers.

Find out more about the Ambassadors scheme, including what our current Ambassadors are doing around the world by visiting www.bps.ac.uk/ambassadors.

Who can be an Ambassador?

With the exception of undergraduate members, anybody who has been a member of the Society for more than six months can apply to be an Ambassador.

Ambassador activity covers all areas of pharmacology, from academia and industry research to clinical settings and beyond, and you can adapt the role to fit your expertise and areas of interest.

Why become an Ambassador?

The Ambassadors scheme supports our members to be strong representatives of both the Society and the pharmacology community. As an Ambassador you will develop skills and expertise that will help you throughout your career, while building international networks and always having fun with pharmacology!

We have a range of support and resources to help you as an Ambassador. Visit our website to find out more.
