Become a member today

The British Pharmacological Society represents around 2,500 early career pharmacologists, including undergraduates, postgraduates, recent graduates and those who have completed a scientific or medical qualification in the last 5 years. As a global community at the heart of pharmacology, the Society provides access to a range of benefits for members throughout all stages of their career. We look forward to welcoming new members - so join today by using the details above!

Reduced membership rates

The Society offers free membership for undergraduates throughout their degree, and reduced membership rates for postgraduates and early career researchers.

The Early Career Pharmacologists Advisory Group (ECPAG)

This group represents the voice of early career members across all areas of Society activity. They work with the Society's Council and other committees to provide support for the next generation of pharmacologists by:

- Acting as ambassadors for all early career pharmacologists to widen participation and ensure accurate representation
- Working with the Society and other organisations to create a vibrant and inclusive pharmacology community that welcomes equality and celebrates diversity
- Championing the diverse career opportunities available to early career pharmacologists

Career development & networking

The Society enables early career members to expand their professional networks and get advice from more established pharmacologists.

Recognising excellence

The Society always looks to recognise excellence and innovation in all areas of pharmacology. Our prizes, awards and grants help to shine a light on the brilliant contributions of our members throughout their careers. Apply or nominate someone today!

Support for student societies & events

The Society can also provide support for pharmacology societies and clubs at member's institutions - including sponsorship of an event or lecture.

Early Career Life Scientists (ECLS) Symposium

The Society, in collaboration with the Biochemical Society and the Physiological Society, provides emerging scientists with an opportunity to organise their own symposium, network and build new contacts.
